Casa Polanco, Mexico City

Mexico City is hardly unknown, but its most exciting addition, a 19-suite luxury villa in the tony neighborhood of Polanco, qualifies as tucked away. The thoughtfully reimagined 1930s manse once hosted aristocrats and, come March (when it soft opens), should see its fair share of rarefied visitors seeking privacy, elevated hospitality and extraordinarily elegant digs. Some of the city’s most celebrated restaurants cater to hotel guests, who can also retreat to the spa cabin for a different kind of decadence; from $380, casapolanco.com
